Two "MUST GO TO" Events Happening

Volume 25
Number 1

Wolves in Sheep's Clothing: Infiltrating the Catholic Church
Michael Hichborn of Lepanto Institute to Speak

Mr. Hichborn with Archbishop Vigano

Mr. Hichborn is the Founder and President of Lepanto Institute. Many consider him as our very own Catholic Church organization investigator. He Exposed the Corruption in the Catholic Church regarding Catholic Relief Services (CRS "Rice Bowl") as well as the USCCHD (US Catholic Campaign for Human Development).

Hichborn is a Christendom graduate (B.A., poly sci and econ) who also holds a Master's degree in Education from American Intercontinental University. He has worked with American Life League, Defend the Faith, the John Paul II Academy for Human Life and the Family and opened two Catholic schools in Fredericksburg, VA. He and his wife, Alyssa have six children and a precious one on the way!

What: Wolves in Sheep's Clothing: Who is Infiltrating the Catholic Church? is the title of his compelling St. Louis briefing. Q & A will follow.

Prayer, Rosary Crusade to Combat Dissident Priest Gathering

The Association of U.S. Catholic Priests (AUSCP) is holding its annual assembly in St. Louis this year. (https://www.uscatholicpriests.org/)

Founded in 2011, it boasts to be are the largest association of Catholic priests. That is wrong. Everyone knows the largest association is the Catholic Faith!

Instead of focusing on the worship of Our LORD and His and His Holy Trinity's supernatural nature, saving souls and spreading the one True Faith to all nations as is our great commission, it takes a different road. Members attempt to create a "new church" to replace our 2000 year old Church by indoctrinating bishops on "retreats". They stress worldly issues which divert people from and are contrary to our One True Catholic faith; these topics include:

- Perpetuating Racism
- Homosexual clergy and religious
- Climate change
- Priestless parishes
- Ordination of women to permanent diaconate
- Unbridled immigration

Cardinal Burke Wows Catholics and Protestants Alike - Presents CREDO Awards

Cardinal Burke & MC Mark Serafino

By Kiera Petrick and Helen Gelhot

Paul Hagan, a CREDO of the Catholic Laity (CREDO) board member, kicked off its Raymond Leo Cardinal Burke CREDO Dinner Forum that freezing January Saturday night at the Clayton Plaza Hotel. He opened the evening with prayer, leading everyone seated at their dinner tables – nearly 600 – in reciting the Memorare, in unison. It was the first of many powerful and humbling experiences that evening.

As the photographer, I didn't experience the night in the same way as everyone else. It has been said that it was an event like none other in recent St. Louis history. We were packed to capacity and sadly, a few people who didn't get their tickets early had to be turned away.

Despite the 100% predictions of freezing rain that day and evening, people attended from a seven-state area as well from Washington D.C.! Both Catholics and Protestants gathered to hear the truth preached by His Eminence. One non-Catholic even volunteered from the beginning to the end and was the first to buy a dinner ticket.

Some came into town a day early to make sure to be in place as part of the faithful crowd clamoring to hear and see His Eminence. Academics, farm families, rural homeschool families, metropolitan couples, young adults, teens, children, and elderly adults alike all braved the potential ice and snow, (continued on page 3) requiring strategic plans in some cases and prompted some to reserve hotel rooms in others in preparation for the potentially dangerous weather.

Beautiful red rose petals adorned the tables, but I was focused on Cardinal Burke in an effort to capture as many photos of him with his flock as possible; he was their shepherd. The dinner, drinks and desserts looked magnificent. The presentations were exquisite and almost looked too good to eat, especially with the lovely orchid ornamentation.

I had the unique position of being able to observe everyone and everything more closely than I would have had I been one of the guests, which was an amazing experience. What I saw that night still warms my heart, particularly when I look through the photos, and I wish I could experience it again.

Of course, I noticed the beauty of the room and of all the people dressed in their best, but the real beauty of the night was in a large group of Catholics coming together in faith, friendship, charity, peace, and prayer and to spend time with a beloved Prince of the Church who embodies these qualities himself, and in the joy that permeated the room, visible on the faces of these families and old friends as they shared not only a dinner but, even more importantly and profoundly, faith and hope.

Over and over, I had the privilege of watching people greet each other with hugs and smiles. Before and during dinner, everywhere I looked, I saw people glowing. They were engaged in conversations with one an-other, looking one another in the eye rather than looking at a phone; connections between them were not only visible but sensible.

Mary Rose Desloge, Cdl. Burke, Dr. Ann Martin and Carole Less

Some of the most moving connections I was blessed to observe were with Cardinal Burke as long lines formed to greet him, patiently waiting for their chance to have a few words with His Eminence. The good Cardinal, for his part, lovingly greeted all of the faithful who came to him. Many reverently kissed his ring or his hand while others warmly shook his hand, and all who approached were welcomed with attentiveness, respect, kindness, and the pastoral care of a father. Though I did not hear any of His Eminence's conversations, I could see clearly the high regard people had toward him as well as the care he had for all. From a few words to a handshake to a tenderly listening ear to a blessing for all who asked, His Eminence gave himself to all who sought him. He never turned down a request. I dare say, most would not have been so gracious. While I cannot know what effect this had on those who spoke with him, I did have the impression that all joyfully came away from their encounter with him.

Throughout dinner people enjoyed one another's company as clearly evidenced by the many big embraces and laughing faces to be seen across the room. Everyone was together, as faithful Catholics and other Christians, with faith and hope, not to mention love for Holy Mother Church and our Father in Heaven; how could there not be joy? Even concern for the state of the world and wrongs committed by the very shepherds, who are meant to protect us, cannot destroy the faith and hope of a devoted people.

Howard C. Brandt, CREDO Co-founder awarded by Cdl. Burke

Robert E. Hurley, M.D. receives CREDO's Presidential Award from Cdl. Burke

Past CREDO presidents were also honored with their own similar plaques, which were adorned with a gavel. These included a Robert E. Hurley, M.D., a few of the founders, and two posthumous awards for Ray Mertens and Col. Jim Bigalke, D.D.S., USAF, Ret.

They all worked hard for over 23 years to preserve and cultivate Catholic culture here.

Perhaps, the greatest award presented by Cardinal Burke was given posthumously to George Knollmeyer. He had conceived and spearheaded a project establishing Eucharistic Adoration in an astonishing 200 plus parishes. The award, a bronze statue of a knight, kneeling in prayer, on a large inscribed base, was over a foot tall. His wife, Mary, graciously accepted the award on his behalf with words of love, echoing George's great love of the Eucharist. I can't speak for anyone else, but this photographer could not witness such grace and beauty with dry eyes.

Focusing on capturing photos not just of Cardinal Burke as he spoke but also of the faithful as they listened, I saw a thirsty people; their eyes were riveted on His Eminence. Throughout the room, eyes were fixed, soaking in his words with full attention. They had come to listen to the wisdom and encouragement of our favorite Cardinal, which was met of course with a standing ovation.

The night provided a lovely opportunity for Catholics to come together and to support one another in spirit as well as to relish being with one Prince of the Church who has remained steadfastly faithful. Thanks be to God for this good servant and for the opportunity to connect to one another in spiritual camaraderie! May we all imitate Cardinal Burke's faith, hope, and charity and encourage one another in this pursuit, just as he encouraged us on this beautiful evening. (Continued on Page 11)

Marian Catechist Question & Answer

Question: Don't take this the wrong way. I am not one of those "holier-than-thou" types. I can party with the best of 'em even since being out of school. I now even worship the Cards and the Blues with the other guys here, though I am fairly new to the St. Louis area.

I have a question on appropriate clothing for Mass. I usually see people at my parish Sunday Mass dressed in a way that is very casual and disrespectful. The women wear short or low-cut or "painted on" clothes and bare arms (if I wanted to see that I would go to a bar or on online). Men and women are in shorts with their bare legs sticking out, flip flops, jeans, tee shirts and sports uniforms. This seems like a wealthy enough parish. Are these people too cool, too busy or just ignorant when it comes to paying respect to the "Big Guy Upstairs" or what is the deal here?

New Guy in Town

Answer: Thank you, New Guy in Town, for your well placed concern and for your question. This matter is indeed, timely, cogent and multifaceted. It greatly needs to be addressed.

Let us consider the place which our God and which our beloved church should occupy in our hearts and in our minds. When entering a Catholic Church, we are entering the House of God, the King of kings and Lord of lords, Who deserves all of our adoration, reverence and awe. To enter the palace of an earthly king, one would dress as befits the dignity of the king and the prominence and distinction of the place. Much care would be exercised in choosing appropriate and modest apparel.

Our Catholic Church houses the real presence of our most loving God in the Most Blessed Sacrament. Hence, it is the most sacred place on earth. When even passing a Catholic Church, (continued on page 5) it is a laudable custom to bow to Jesus and to recite a short prayer. A phrase in Psalm 95 counsels, "Enter His courts; worship the Lord in holy attire." Psalm 28 reads, "Give to the Lord the glory due His name; adore the Lord in holy attire," words of wisdom. Our interior conviction of the Real Presence of Jesus, in the Most Blessed Sacrament, should dictate our exterior manner of dress and of deportment.

Sadly, we have all observed the disrespectful attire of so many of our brothers and sisters in Christ. If we could see God with our earthly eyes, we can but imagine our care in preparing to be in His presence. So often we hear it said, "God doesn't care what we wear." Certainly, God cares that we care. One wouldn't even go to work, etc., in the attire that is seen in church. We dress according to the importance, which we attach to the occasion. It is an exterior manifestation of one's interior thought, or absence of thought, concerning the circumstance. Again, may our interior conviction concerning the majesty of God direct our exterior disposition.

In our present-day society, we have gradually become lax in our choice of dress in so many areas, and most sadly, when preparing to meet Jesus in the Blessed Sacrament and in the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass. Like the frog in the boiling water, we have become desensitized. May we with care and thought, dress with dignity. God in His holy temple, deserves all of our reverence and awe." Blessed art Thou in the holy temple of Thy glory and exceedingly to be praised." Daniel 3:53. ~ Mary Knollmeyer

The Wanderer Takes Action . . .

The Movie All America Must See

By Rey Flores

Reprinted From the Wanderer, Issue Dated 4-18-2019

A few weeks ago, you read my review of Unplanned, the film that has taken America by storm. On its opening weekend, the film was a hit, despite the fact that most media refused to sell advertising space to the film's studio.

This success did not happen as a fluke. Pro-life activists across the land rallied their troops to help make this true story of a former Planned Parenthood clinic director turned pro-lifer a smash hit.

Of all the markets where the film opened across the country, two very dedicated individuals put their thinking caps on and got the support of family, friends, donors, anyone who they could bring onboard in the St. Louis, Mo., metro area.

The movie they called a "game changer"—Unplanned—came to the attention of Christopher "Zip" Rzeppa, a former popular sports broadcaster, and now president of Mater Media, and Dr. Helen Gelhot, president of CREDO of the Catholic Laity, which is dedicated to the defense of Church doctrine and the promotion of Catholic values through seminars, presentations, retreats, and other activities.

Long before the movie's March 29 release, Helen was helping Zip with another project. Having heard of the soon-to-be-released film, Zip made connections with the producers to help bring them to St. Louis for a pre-screening of the film, and to share some of what went on behind making this important story into a motion picture.

Mike Manhardt, one of the movie's producers and actors, and Tom Hall—another "movie guy"—did indeed fly into St. Louis to help create a strong buzz around the film's release.

The idea was to bring folks together at a head-turning event showing the Unplanned movie—within one week. These would be people who were committed "pro-lifers" and who could be inclined to write a nice check to support the movie. A tall order. The movie was paid for and completed, but now the job was to generate revenue for ticket purchase to encourage folks to actually see the film. (continued on page 6)

Anne Woods & Zip

CREDO and Mater Media boards, and families and friends wholeheartedly came on board supporting the Unplanned joint project. With the stunning setting of the Skip Viragh Performing Arts Center at Chaminade College Preparatory School, wine and hors d'oeuvres preceded the screening on an impressive 30-foot screen at the Center. Friends and even their children helped with every detail of the prescreening, including the exceptional food and beverage spread.

Some of the attendees were kind and brave enough to share their own abortion story. There was a counselor, Kathleen Guerra, LPC, on hand for those in need. Project Joseph's Chuck Raymond Sr. and Silent No More's Linda Raymond were there with help for those suffering after abortion.

Dr. & Mrs. Robert & Kim Morgan & Family with the Schneiers

One kindly physician, once on the frontlines of the abortion battle on the sidewalk surrounding Planned Parenthood, praying the rosary regularly with his devoted wife, now uses a walker. He had committed to giving a large amount of money prior to seeing Unplanned.

Upon exiting the theater, he proclaimed to Helen, "I've changed my mind!" He then followed that up with, "I'm doubling my gift to you for Unplanned tickets" as he hurried along.

Mater Media and CREDO of the Catholic Laity also orchestrated a second pre-screening in Zip's home only six days later. The event was no less elegant, and it was also graced with wonderfully generous donors. As it ended up, some donors were not even present at either event, but again the "movie guys" flew in for a repeat performance.

Dr. Bernie & Martha Swaykus

Guests, excited to meet the Hollywood team and listen to the story of the making of Unplanned, were thankfully just as motivated to donate, collectively over $60,000 to CREDO of the Catholic Laity and Mater Media in order to purchase tickets to Unplanned.

Audience reception was ecstatic, everyone was uplifted and more determined than ever in their pro-life efforts. Indeed, the words "game changer" echoed amongst the moviegoers that night. There was nothing but praise coming from the spellbound audience. A couple of the guests were so thrilled they even flew to LA for the opening of Unplanned there two days after the Chaminade event!

Armed with $60,000 Mater Media and CREDO, with the help of crack financial analyst, John Dolan, negotiated with AMC (a Catholic, family-owned national theater company) and others to purchase dozens of "screens" in local theaters and fill them with folks who happily received their free tickets to see Unplanned.

Fr. Mark Chrismer leading the audience in prayer

Additionally, Brian Westbrook of Coalition for Life was instrumental in the process. He played an important role as well and had volunteers at the theaters to collect any donations and information, so as to keep in contact for future such endeavors. Brian had an online FREE ticket purchase site to complement Helen's and Zip's personal networking efforts.

Networking included local and regional individual leaders, parishes, schools, megachurches, Christian ministries, clubs and other organizations, friends and neighbors; they all rose to the (continued on page 7) occasion to fill the Unplanned seats. This was something they professed they would have done anyway. Now they had a sense of urgency and an extra incentive.

Zip Rzeppa opening Unplanned movie

CREDO and Mater Media ultimately purchased and filled approximately 6,000 seats for Unplanned. The St. Louis market was number one for Unplanned tickets sold in the nation on opening weekend; this is especially impressive when you understand St. Louis market is only number 21 in U.S. media market size!

Unplanned earned an opening weekend of $6.1 million, double the amount projected by box office trackers. All this despite the severe muzzling Unplanned received from channels like Hallmark and HGTV, who refused to air paid ads for the movie. The movie also had its website, Twitter and Facebook accounts shut down, as well as other significant online "mishaps." Of note was the biased information on the group-think website called Rotten Tomatoes.

This is where The Wanderer comes in. After conversations with Zip and Dr. Helen, Wanderer publisher Joe Matt consulted with me and we were truly in awe of what Zip, Dr. Helen, and their network in St. Louis and with the film's producers accomplished in St. Louis.

We want to replicate this same plan in markets across the country in order to get as many people, especially those who are either still "pro-choice," or are sitting on the fence regarding abortion, to see Unplanned.

As we all agree, Abby Johnson's story told so poignantly in this film is a very powerful tool to change hearts and minds. Let's make this happen over and over all across America.

See the details on how you can help below this article.

It is important to note that the movie is a documented "game changer," as Students for Life's survey shows now that just over 50 percent of students who consider themselves "prochoice," change to pro-life after seeing Unplanned! Also multiple witnessed incidents of mothers deciding not to abort their babies have followed the viewing of Unplanned.

Together we can bring as many people into these seats to make Unplanned a sustained success in movie theaters across the land, encouraging movie theaters to extend the showing of Unplanned for weeks to come.

We also ask that anyone interested in bringing the film into markets where Unplanned hasn't been shown to convince movie houses, based on the success of St. Louis and other markets we hope to strongly influence, to bring Unplanned into their cities and towns.

We also ask that you please share our campaign far and wide on all of your social media platforms, your email lists, and with all of your family, friends, parishes, schools, homeschooling groups, and anyone else you can think of.

Unplanned has already made movie history. Let's make Unplanned an even greater part of movie history. Thank you.

Mike & Karen DiScala with Zip

Why Worship God?

By Joe Sixpack—The Every Catholic Guy

Personally, I think there are two things all Christians should be able to prove—especially Protestants. Our separated brethren claim strict adherence to the Bible as the end-all-be-all of divine revelation, believing it to be the "inspired" word of God, yet none of them knows how to prove the Bible is inspired. Well, I think they should have to prove that. Catholics too, for that matter. That is something we will cover in a future issue.

There is yet another thing all Christians should be able to prove... especially us.

Perhaps one of he most puzzling things for me about most modern Christians is, they worship Someone they cannot prove. Obviously they all believe in God, but they can't prove His existence. What kind of sense does that make? Why worship a Being you can't prove exists? It's like believing in the Tooth Fairy.

The question is, can God's existence be proven? Well, not with empirical scientific evidence... yet. However, His existence most certainly can be proven through the use of logic and right reason. So let's delve right into it!

Many people rely on the "Big Bang" theory to pooh-pooh God's existence. They claim that there was just this huge explosion and when it cooled we had the universe. Silly, but true! These scientifically inclined people even deny the principles of the science they worship with such a theory. One of the laws of physics tells us that every movement—an explosion, which leads to the universe, solar system, earth, plant life, animal life, humans—must have a "first mover". How can a huge explosion from nothing happen without a first mover; that is a cause? The Big Bang theory can make sense, but only if there is a first mover, and the only possible first mover is God. So in reality, the Big Bang theory actually proves the existence of God. This argument (and what follows) is called the argument by design.

We can see from creation that all could only exist by the power of an infinitely wise, all-powerful, self-existing Being. He is a logical God who has created a logically functioning universe. Look at the food chain. The smallest microscopic organism is food for the next largest organism, is food for the next largest organism, is food for the next largest organism, and so on. Eventually, it becomes food for man, the highest form of natural creation. When we eat a pork chop or chicken leg and digest it, the process begins all over again.

Look at the trees. Trees "inhale" carbon dioxide and "exhale" oxygen. We inhale oxygen and exhale carbon dioxide. The trees can't live without us, and we can't live without the trees. Accident? I don't think so. What a logical God!

We all intuitively know it's wrong to steal, wrong to lie, wrong to unjustly take an innocent human life. We intuitively know the difference between right and wrong. That is called natural law. Since we know these things intuitively, the fact that we have natural law implies a lawgiver. Whom else could that lawgiver be but God?

My favorite argument, though, is more elementary and more satisfying to we Joe Sixpacks. Due to our lack of space, we will simply concede certain things as true here, as they are quickly and easily proven with a few minutes spent on Google.

It is a historical fact that the books of the Old Testament are ancient Hebrew literature. We're not saying they're inspired or even true, for the sake of this argument. We're merely stating they are ancient Hebrew literature.

The second fact is that Jesus of Nazareth is a real, historical person. We're not saying anything about him at this point except that he truly existed in Israel 2,000 years ago. Some scoffers would say the only proof we have of his existence are the four Gospels, but that simply isn't true. There are four secular characters of the time who attest to Jesus' existence: Pliny, Tacitus, Suetonius, and Flavius Josephus. Pliny, Tacitus and Suetonius were pagans and certainly no friends of Christianity, so their written record is reliable. Flavius Josephus was a Jew and a Roman Citizen, and he was also no friend of Jesus of Nazareth. So we actually have eight sources to prove Jesus was a true historical person: Pliny, Tacitus, Suetonius, Flavius Josephus, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. Now for the argument.

The Old Testament, the ancient Hebrew literature, is filled with prophecies about the coming of a messiah, the earliest reference being in Genesis, then Jeremiah, Isaiah, the Psalms, etc. If we were to take all those prophecies and list them on paper, we could then go to our historical sources mentioned above to find that Jesus of Nazareth fulfilled all those prophecies. Does that prove Jesus is the messiah? No, not at all. It only proves that he fulfilled the prophecies, but three types of people could have done that: either a bad man, a mad man, or… the messiah.

Could Jesus have been a bad man? Could he awaken one day and decide that if he convinced the people he was truly the messiah he could gain wealth and power? Yes, but that argument won't float. Why? Because the prophecies also tell us the messiah had to die. What bad man (criminal) is willing to die just to prove a point, especially after gathering his following? None, of course! Therefore, Jesus could not have been a bad man.

Could he have been a mad man, a crazy person? Could a crazy guy wake up one day thinking he was hearing the voice of God telling him he is the messiah and he should begin fulfilling the prophecies? Certainly he could, and a mad man would even be willing to die, but that argument won't pan out either. A mad man simply isn't capable of remaining consistent long enough to pull off such a thing as Jesus did. Psychologists have studied Jesus since the beginning of their science in the 19th century, and they universally agree he was certainly consistent. They may not like what he taught, but they most certainly agree he was consistent. Therefore, Jesus could not have been a mad man.

That only leaves us with the third man, the man who is what he says he is… the messiah. Jesus claims not only to be the messiah, but he actually claims to be God! And He makes this claim repeatedly (cf. Jn. 10:24-31). My personal favorite of His claims to divinity is found in John 8:58 when He said, "Truly, truly I say to you, before Abraham was, I am". This is the same phrase God used to describe Himself in Exodus 3:14, and I urge you to read these two passages and their context. So if Jesus couldn't have been a bad man, and if He couldn't have been a mad man, and He must be who He says He is, and He claims to be God, therefore God must exist!

There is much more to these arguments than space allows here. So I urge you to visit my website at JoeSixpackAnswers.com for more information.

Now you can defend God's existence to anyone to whom you speak. Most people say they don't discuss controversial subjects. I agree; neither do I. So I never discuss organized sports and soap operas. Religion, however, deals with matters of truth, and truth can never be controversial. It can be emotional, but never controversial. And that, my friends, is the reason for this column; so you can know What We Believe… Why We Believe It.

The Happily Homosexual Mayor and the Burning of Notre Dame

We all have loved ones with same sex attraction however this is something different. This past Palm Sunday, no less, Mayor Pete Buttigieg (D), South Bend Indiana, who celebrates his homosexuality proclaiming his "marriage" to a man, announced his candidacy to the Presidency of the U.S. at approximately 3:19 pm cst. This is an obvious first. Pete's father was on the faculty of Notre Dame. His life-long work was bringing Antonio Gramchi's work to Notre Dame; he was a communist politician. As well he held up Michele Faucault's dark. "anti-logos" philosophy held in high esteem on virtually every secular college campus today

WITHIN 24 hours, at approximately 6:50pm local time (1650 GMT) on 15 April, 2019 - Notre Dame Cathedral began to burn.
